

On Nov 14, 2015, at 9:10 AM, Nelson, Chris <Chris.Nelson@state.sd.us> wrote:

Chad,

I'm intrigued with the dissonance created by offering rebates for energy efficiency measures while simultaneously maintaining a line extension policy that in some circumstances may not support those very same efficiency measures. I still maintain that it is wrong to shift costs from the cost-causing consumer to other consumers but you are correct that in this type of circumstance this may be defeating the incentivizing of efficiency measures. I'll take a look at that.

Chris