the King," and the Germans "Deutschland, Deutschland Uber Alles," just to annoy the other guys.
(The French? Presumably they would sing "Le Marseillaise," which still bears the bloodthirsty refrain: "To arms, citizens, Form your battalions, Generally, the shot didn't come. It is estimated that as many as 100,000 soldiers took Christmas Day off that year, much to the consternation of their senior officers.

The German soldiers sung Christmas carols, many of which had been shared across Europe, translated into Ger-
