mandates and federal funding clawbacks that I believe go too far," Rounds said.

The state's senior senator, Thune, is the second-ranking Senate GOP member behind Minority Leader Mitch McConnell. On Tuesday, Thune veered from McConnell, who supported the bill, in casting a vote against the measure.

Thune said he applauded senators "from both sides of the aisle" for good-faith negotiations, but opposed the bill on its deficit spending.

"While I support investments in our nation's infrastructure, I could not support this final product that will further increase the national debt and financially burden future generations."

Earlier this year, a national infrastructure report card noted that South Dakota faces "challenges," with schools overburdened by debt, nearly 100 dams with "high-hazard potential," and nearly 1 in 5 bridges considered "structurally deficient."
